The LMU Experience

The Loyola Marymount Experience, an experience of learning and of personal growth, takes place in a value-oriented environment, fostered by a campus community of care and concern. This atmosphere of concern for the individual is at the heart of the LMU Experience. It is expressed in the relationships of the faculty and staff with students and those of the students with each other. Maintaining such an atmosphere is a continual challenge to each member of the University community and stands as an ideal for all.

The Beginning

It's been fifty years since the groundbreaking on May 20, 1928 for the Westchester campus. Back then, the campus was surrounded by bean fields and a dump. St. Robert's and Xavier were the first buildings erected on the campus. Others followed quickly.

In 1968, Marymount College became affiliated with Loyola University. The merger of Loyola University and Marymount College came in 1973. It made way for the fourth college in Fine and Communication Arts.

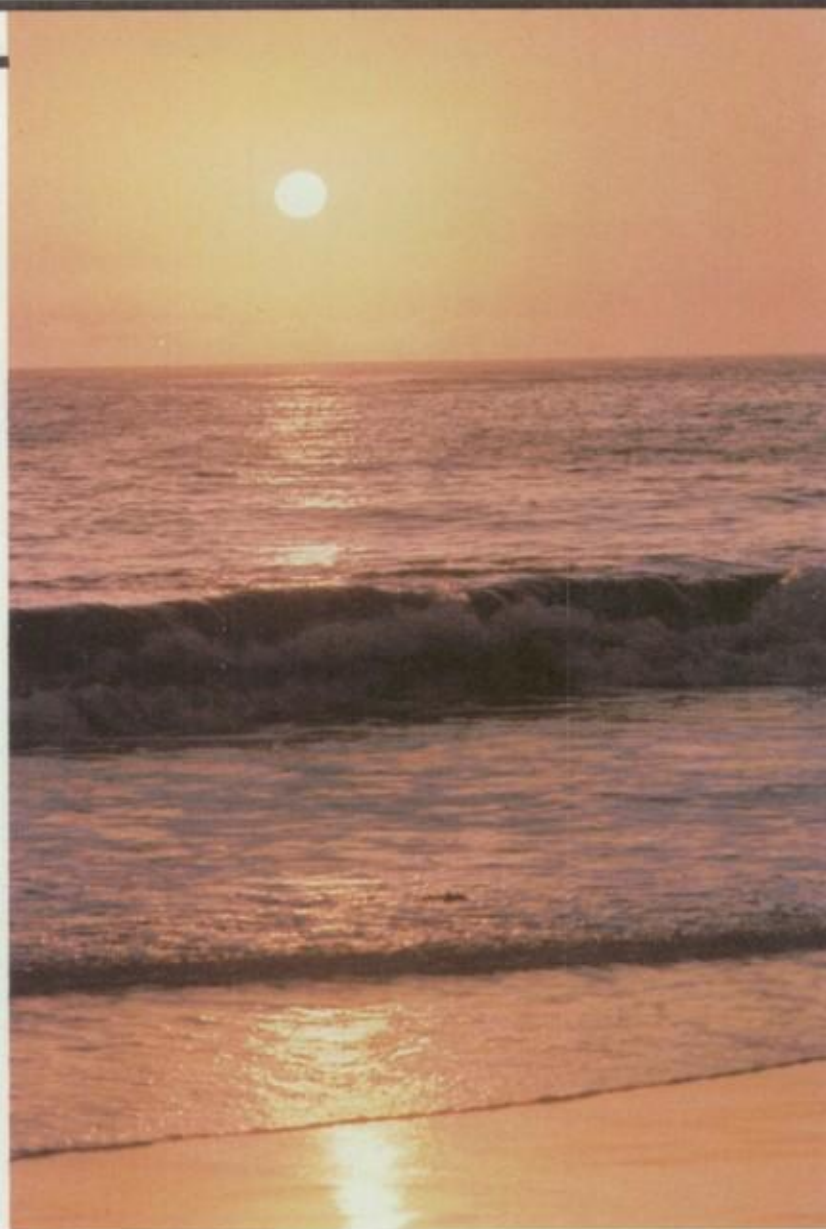

The University continues to grow and prosper. Out of the bean fields has grown a fine University.

The Hannon Apartments are the newest additions to the Westchester campus.

The University's commitment to the LMU Experience is evidenced in the central role given to student counseling through the presence throughout the campus of religious and lay faculty and staff, who are here as friends as well as advisors in academic, career, spiritual, and other personal areas. Worship, a variety of religious retreats, and other opportunities for sharing the very deepest of human concerns and convictions—these, too, are an important part of the LMU Experience.

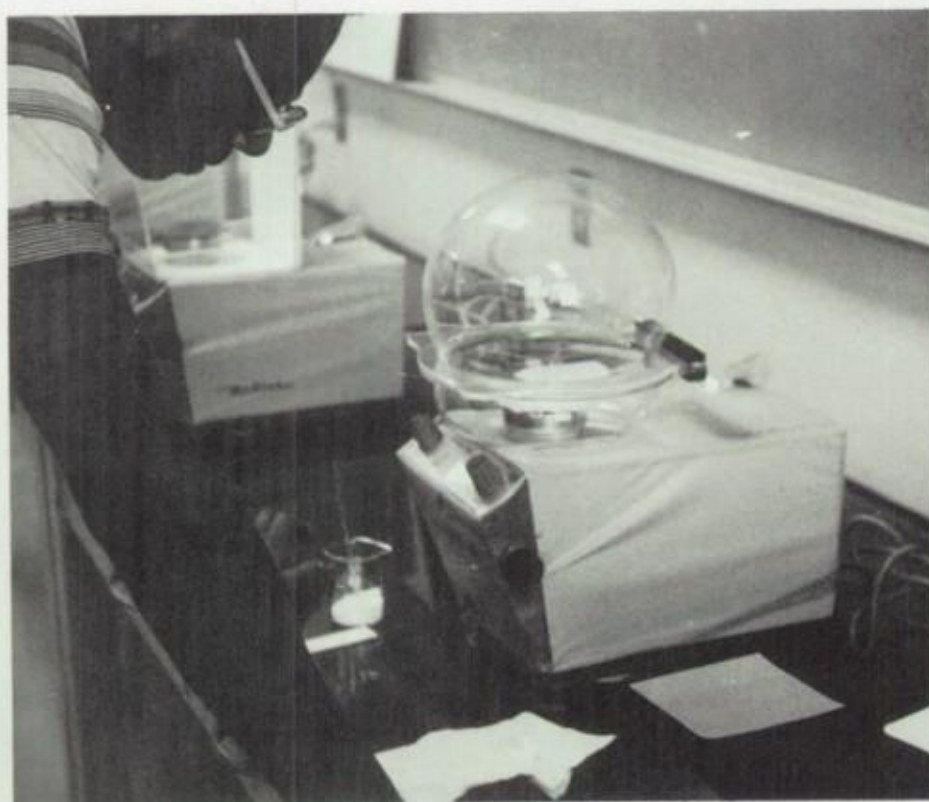

RETRREATS

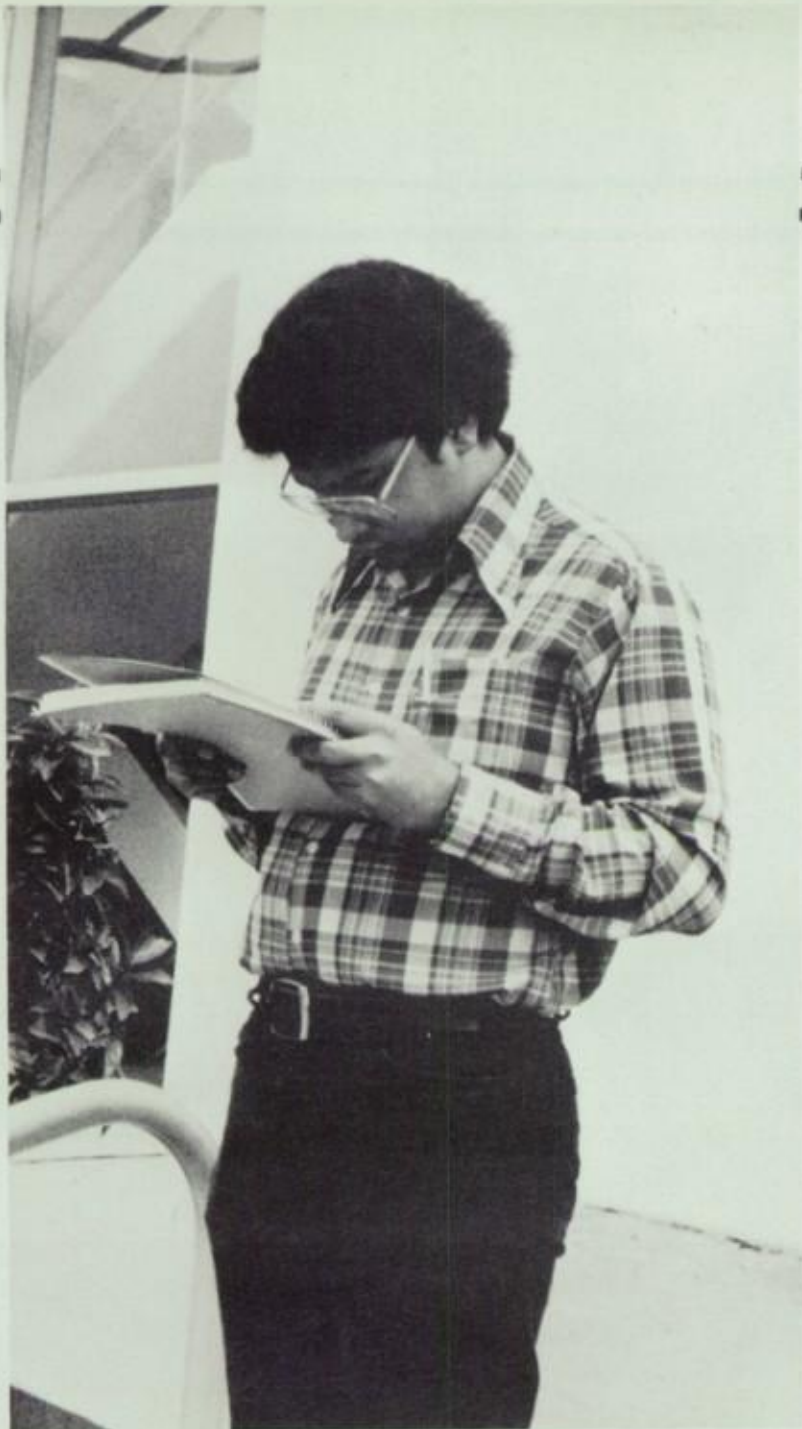

Let the sea thunder and all that it holds,
Let the fields exult and all that is in them,
Let all the trees cry out for joy, at the presence of the Lord.

1 Chronicles 16:32-33

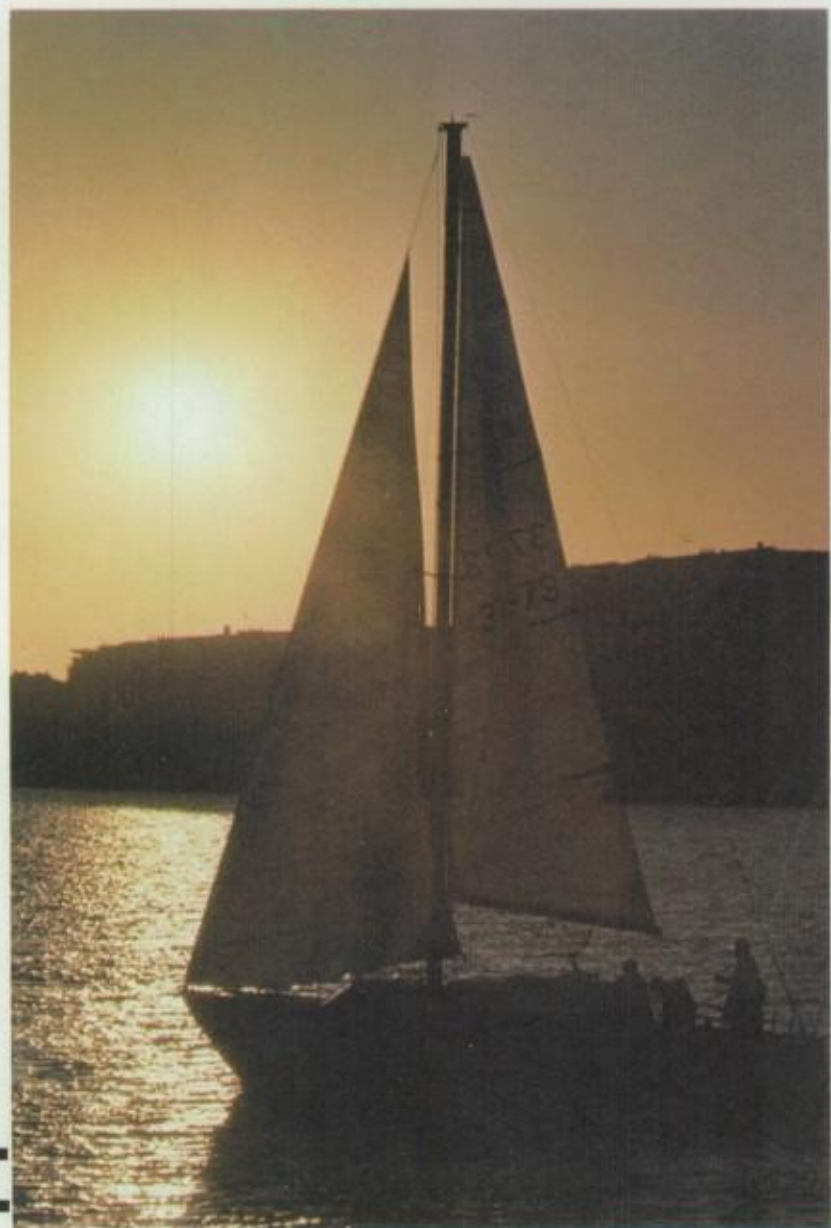

The Experience is enhanced by the competence of the faculty in their fields of specialization and by each faculty member's commitment to the full development of the student.

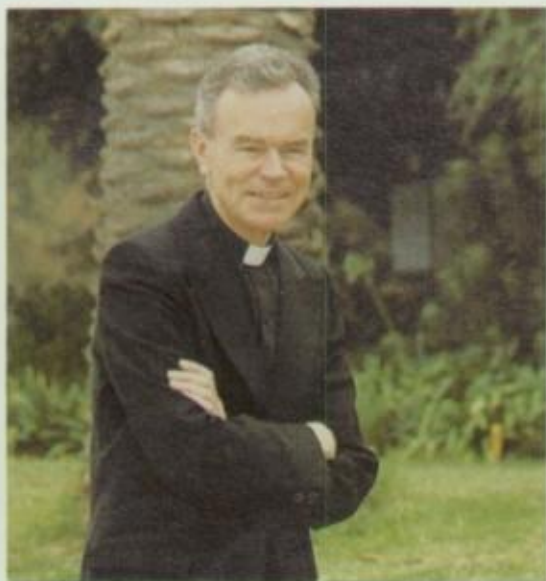

The Future

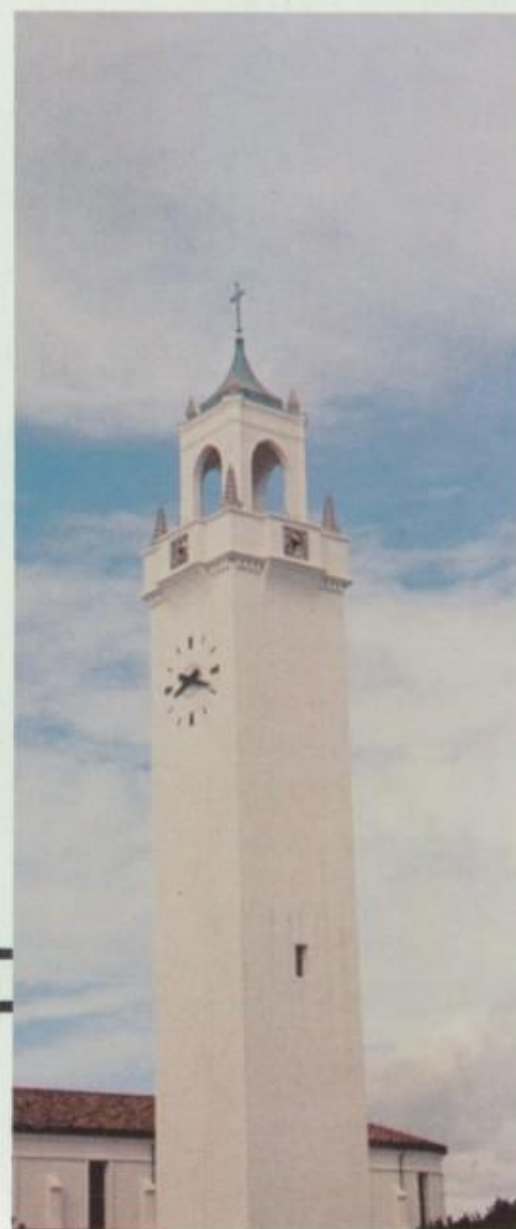

To maintain and improve the Experience, the University has decided to maintain a maximum enrollment of 3000 undergraduates. Also planned is the construction and renovation of much needed facilities. The University has already proposed the building of an Athletic and Recreation Complex, an Art and Music building, and a building to house the already scattered College of Business Administration. The completion of these facilities has been set for the early eighties. It is hoped that the construction and renovation of facilities, along with the decrease in enrollment will guarantee the flourishing of the Experience for future LMU students.

The local marina provides a pleasant escape from studies.

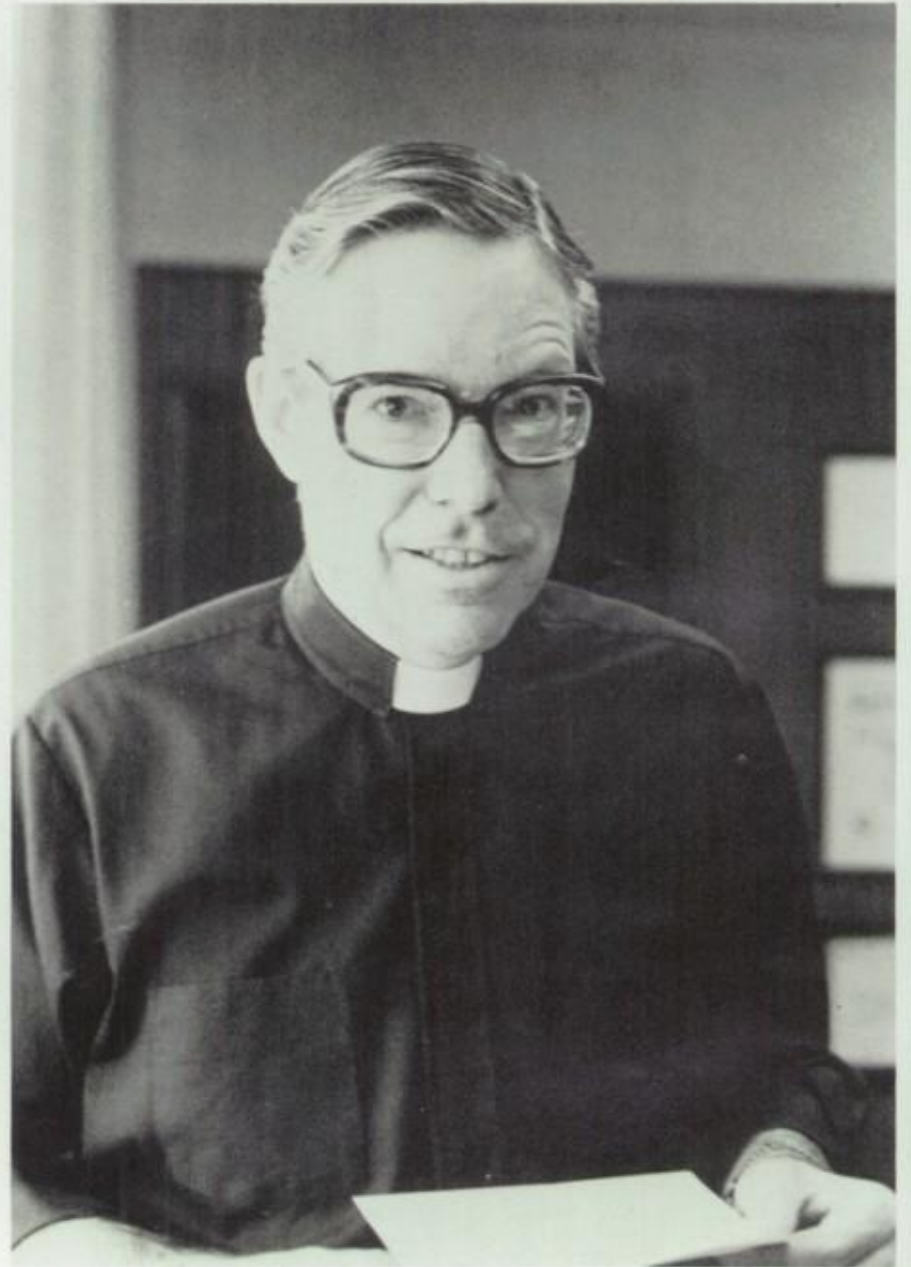

Student relaxes in commuter lounge.

Faculty And Administration

What Loyola Marymount should foster, beyond the pastoral care of those who wish it and beyond authentic presentation of Catholic - and all other - thinking and teaching, is the integration of human and divine, of the immediate and the ultimate, of faith and reason. For humanity cannot be fully understood or appreciated except in a religious context and the religious questions are finally the important ones. But universities cannot be just isolated "think tanks," even if the thinking includes ultimate questions. They are also producers of men and women who will be active in the professions within our society. They must also be centers of responsible and careful criticism upon all aspects of society. This is especially true of the religiously-oriented university. Our graduates, if they have experienced a fully human education, should be change agents within our society for a more just and human world.

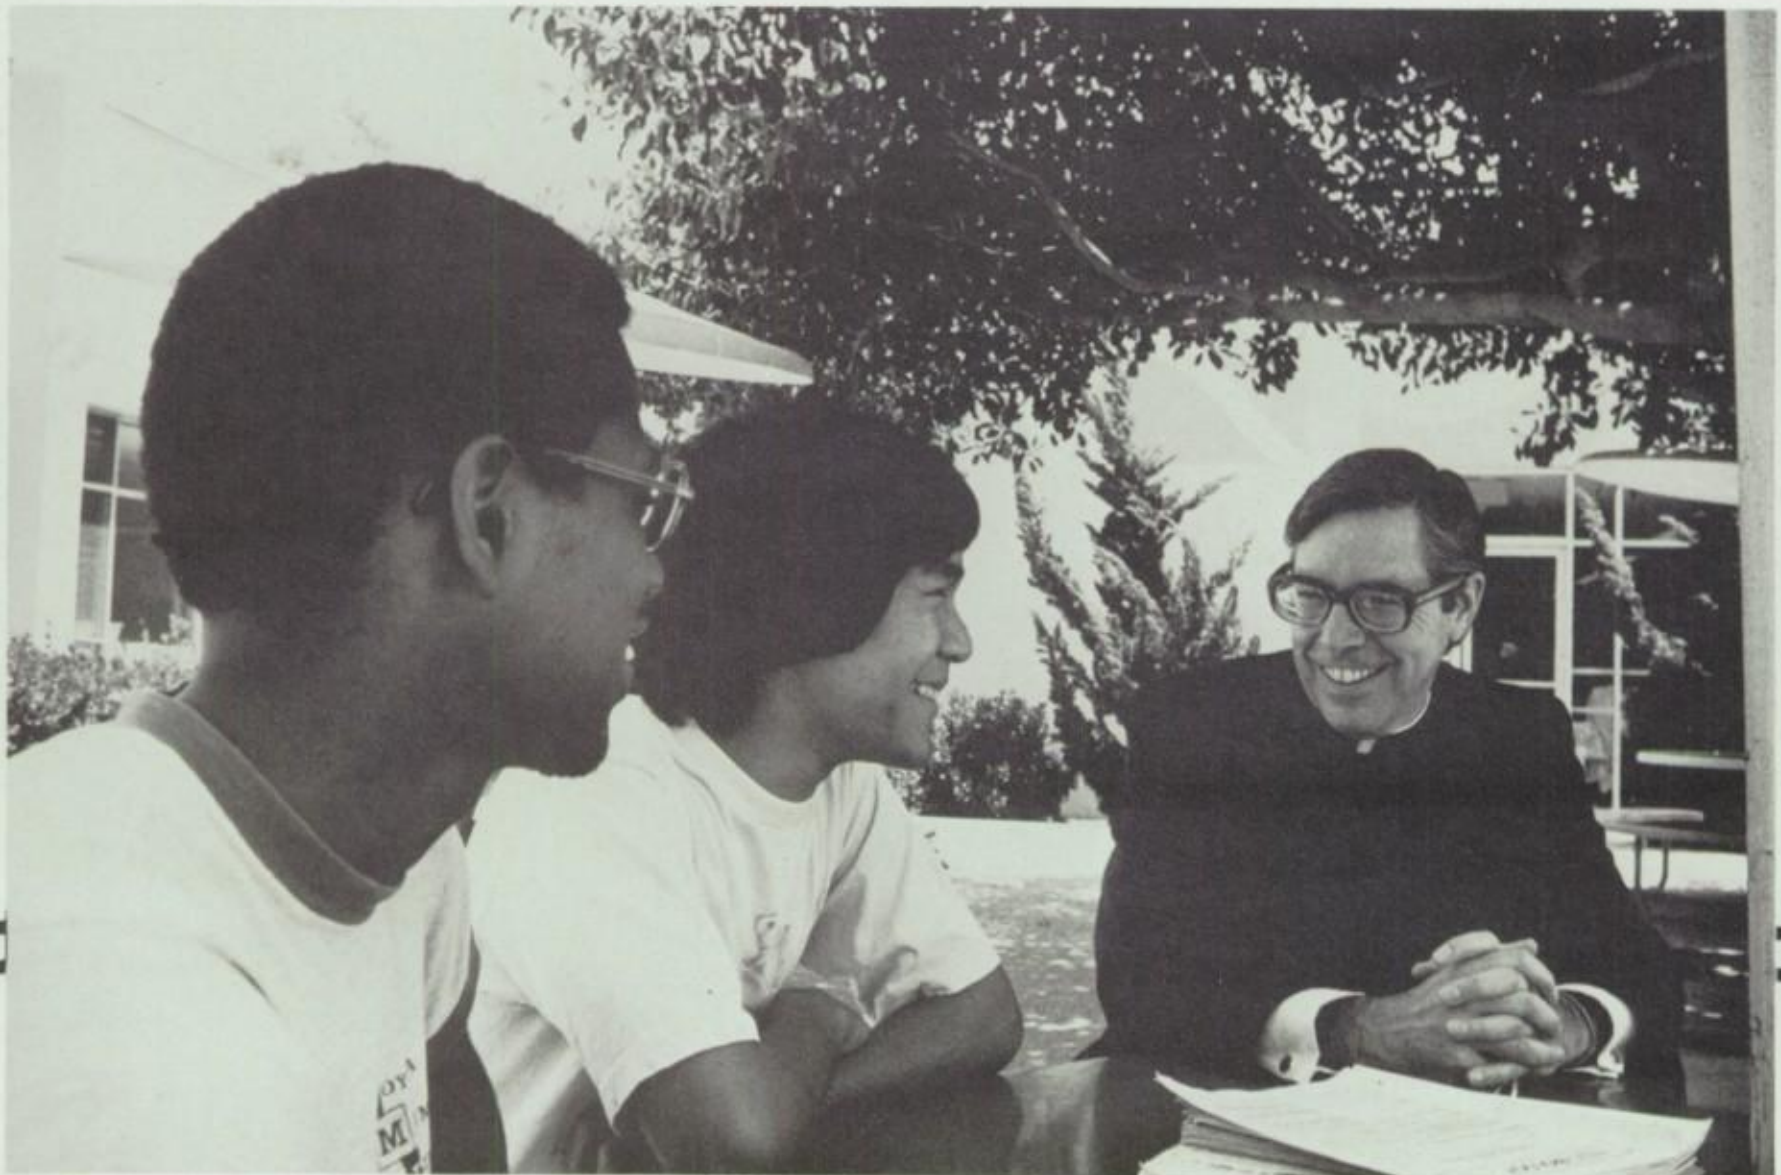

We cannot ignore Catholicism's strong stand against many aspects and values of the contemporary and self-satisfied society of which we are a part and claim to be authentic as a Catholic university. If our education does not make any impact on the values of our graduates, especially social values, we should indeed go out of business. If our only function has been to bring immigrant peoples into mainstream, middle-class America with a certain religiosity such as is still appropriate and respectable, we may indeed have succeeded. But has it been worth it? I, for one, hope we have done more and know that we must do more in the future, if we are to survive.

College Of Science And Engineering

The College of Science and Engineering provides educational programs that prepare our graduates to enter a variety of professional fields, eg, engineering, science education, applied science, computer analysis and health technology. In addition, our programs are designed to prepare our students to gain admission to graduate schools of medicine, dentistry, science, engineering and many others.

The individual programs stress not only science and technology but also the Liberal Arts. Our ultimate goal is to graduate students who will be competent professionals and, more importantly, good human beings.

College Of Business Administration

It takes many things to develop an effective and functioning business person, and in most cases it takes a lifetime. There is much to learn about the specific industry, the individual company for which one works and the details of the particular job. Throughout it all, judgment must be developed, and learning must be continuous. Much of what is needed cannot be learned in a school, but must be acquired on the job and in company developed learning situations.

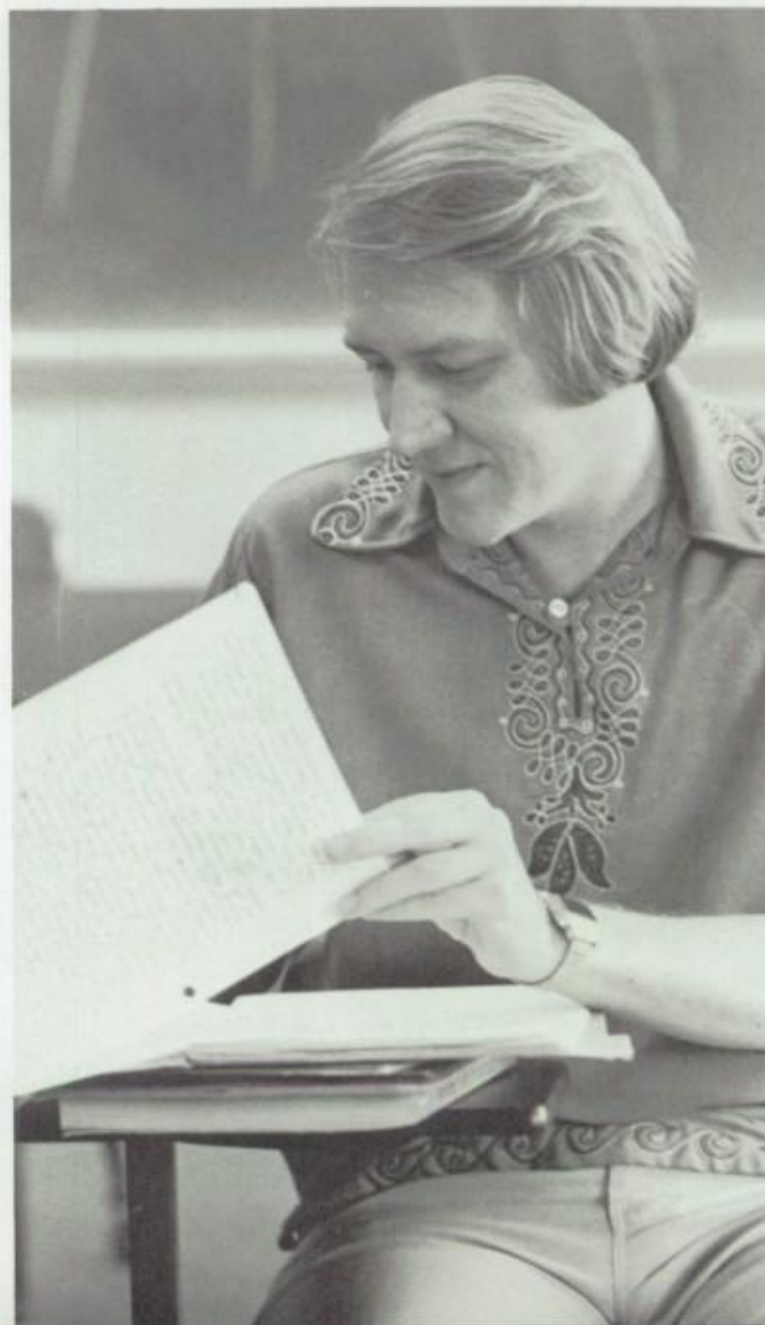

However, there is an important place for education, particularly higher education in business for those who wish to follow careers anywhere in the broad area of administration or management.

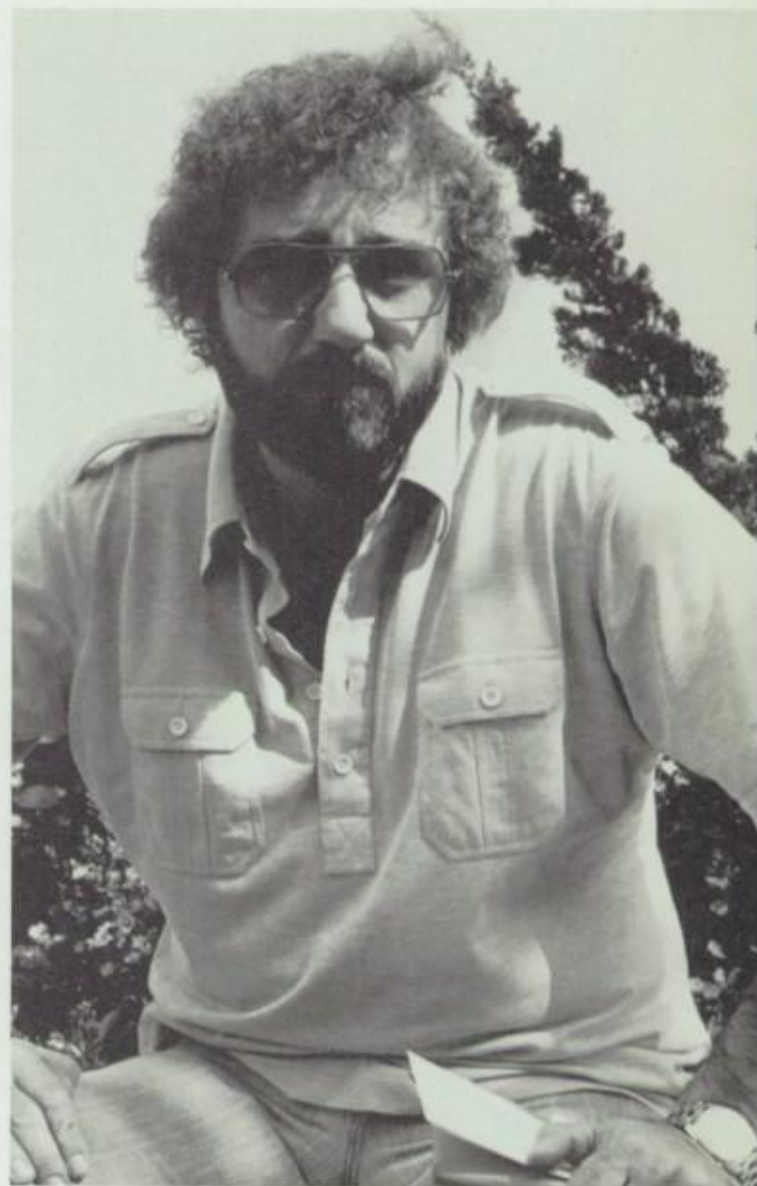

Recognizing this, it is the objective of the College of Business Administration to build its programs on a strong base of the liberal arts; to develop within its students an approach to finding and solving problems; to assist them to master analytical and evaluative techniques in the solving of those problems; and to stress the acquisition of principles and theory underlying problem solving as the matters of continuing value. To accomplish this, the objective is to provide an understanding of the internal and external environments of business and other complex organizations and the expectations of society; to acquire tools of analysis and an understanding of the major areas of study encompassed by the field of business administration—those areas often called the functional areas of business; and finally to build all of the study into a synthesis where business-like applications are made to realistic types of business problems.

At the undergraduate level, the goal in all of this is to put the student in a position where he or she is ready to start a career in a business or other complex organization and will have the insights and understanding to learn quickly in the specific task at hand, and will have values which will be useful throughout a career.

College of Fine and Communication Arts

The College of Fine and Communication Arts centers on public product in ways peculiar to its disciplines—time arts, space arts and combined arts. Students write screenplays, compose music and choreograph dances. They also create visual works, from drawings to sculpture, from paintings to ceramics, from etchings to stained glass windows. Students sing, perform on musical instruments, dance, act, direct, make costumes, run cameras, edit film and create jewelry. The curricula within the College augment the liberal arts courses, which all students take, offering art as a way of knowing the world and the self. Theoretical and historical studies in arts, music, theatre, dance and mass media help the student to place the self in an historical context and to relate the self to evolving cultures, both Western and non-Western.

Faculty and students in the arts work together in exploring and in doing, creating a bond of mutual interdependence and appreciation.

College Of Liberal Arts

Why is the College of Liberal Arts the largest in the University? Why does it continue to attract top students at a period when many young people are seeking what are called "practical" or vocational majors?

The answers, of course, are as diverse as our students. For many, it is a response to their own intellectual curiosity. They want to know more about themselves and other people. They want to understand the world around them and the social forces which have such influence on their lives. They want to find or confirm a belief or a philosophy that will give meaning to their individual lives. In other words, they are on a voyage of discovery and an exploration of their own human potential and abilities.

You and I live in a highly complex world. One of the primary purposes of the College of Liberal Arts is to understand that world—the historical and philosophical influences which have molded it; the social, psychological, religious, and political forces which affect it today. In the broadest sense the liberal arts deal with the study of man as a rational, spiritual, living being. They equip the student with a wide general knowledge, judgment, and an understanding of people and events. Training within the disciplines teaches the student to sort out information, to find answers, to think clearly and logically.

But the faculty of the College are not just involved in the training of the mind, the perfecting of the intellect. As Theodore Roosevelt observed, "To educate a man in mind and not in morals is to educate a menace to society."

Perhaps the most distinctive feature of the various programs in the College is the emphasis upon values. Certainly the question of value is one of the most important challenges facing young people today. The questions are old, but the answers must be realized by each individual and by each generation.

What is good?

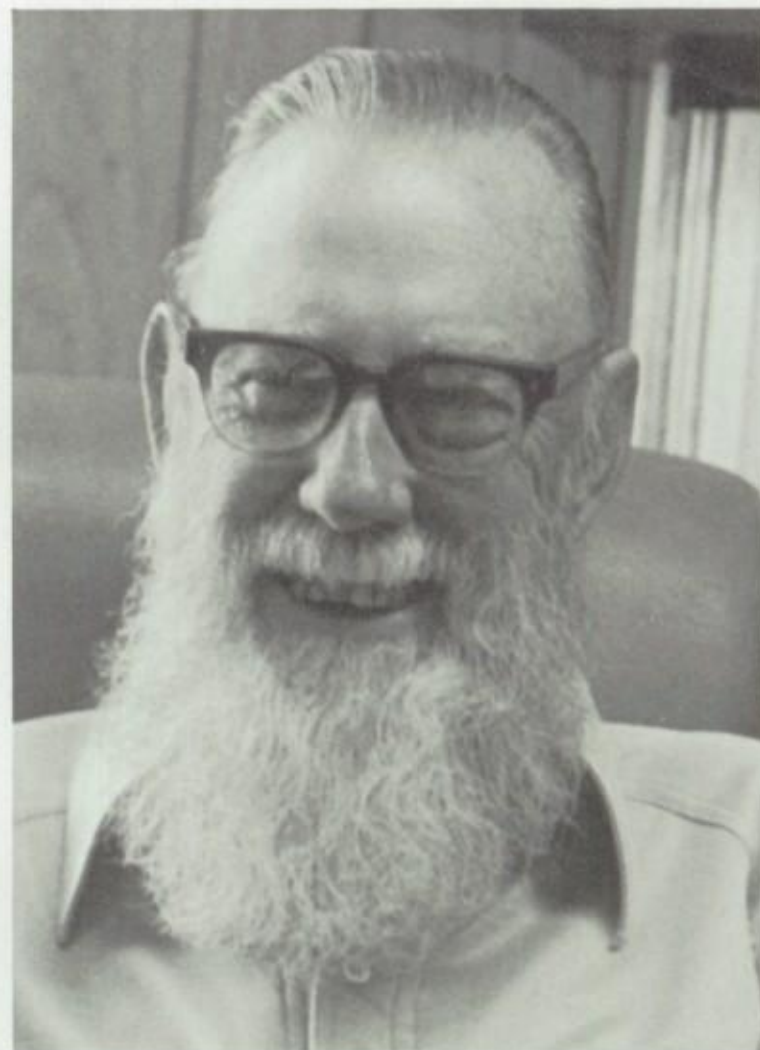

What constitutes happiness?

What are the responsibilities of a human being to others and to his environment?

What is the nature of human freedom?

What do we understand by "rights" and "duties"?

These questions are considered substantially in the courses in philosophy and religious studies. But problems of ethical action

Theodore R. Erlandson
Dean, College of Liberal Arts

are also a central concern in all the various disciplines taught within the College.

In addition, our students are concerned about career preparation. A large number go on to professional schools, others find that the knowledge and the skills they develop in their individual programs lead to interesting and rewarding career possibilities. As a result, our graduates are to be found at every level of business and management, of education, government, law, and the health and social service occupations. Recent graduates are also doing very well at graduate and professional schools from Stanford and the University of California at Berkeley to Harvard and Yale.

The College is proud of the achievements of our students, and remains ever open to change and to the improvement of its programs, while preserving its fundamental commitment to the traditional goals of liberal education.

special thanks to:

eva tomzynski for the cover design,
fran williams for being so very kind,
lmu public relations for their generosity,
sr. agnes and campus ministry for their patience,
sr. teresa munoz for her faith,
and those special few who helped with typing and photography...
especially sherise, pam, linda, gail, martin, roland

...that's it.
